About me

I'm interested in food and food production. I am also a student in conservation biology and I am really interested in agroecology/ ecological intensification. Additionally, I had some courses on organic farming, which I really enjoyed. Furthermore, I live in a more or less rural area in the Netherlands and I would like to explore possibilities what could be implemented.

In very short, I would love to participate in the Forum Synergies Scholarship program for several reasons. First of all, I studied Conservation Biology and throughout my studies I became interested in the applications of ecology in agriculture in achieving greater sustainability. I strongly believe in the importance of our connection with nature and the role of this connection in empowering humans. I would like to learn more about how other like-minded people work on (nature-inclusive) food production, what their philosophy is, what they practise and how they stay motivated. Secondly, I would like to contribute to SRD in the place I live currently (on the countryside, in the Netherlands) and potentially in my home country (Hungary), where I believe there is a lot of room for improvement and for better practices. I imagine my contribution through exchanging knowledge and spreading what I learned during the scholarship. Thirdly, I would like to motivate others and co-create a sustainable platform of any kind (e.g. a community garden or education centre) after having a better understanding on SRD.

What I expect from host organisation

I would love to work on a farm and get my hands dirty in the name of practical experience. Additionally, I would like to work with different groups of stakeholders and learn about the everyday work of my host, whatever that might be (how to run a business or different projects, how to build a community, how to include vulnerable groups etc.)."
