About me

My main motivation to participate in this type of program is to get a better understanding of what is really necessary on the fields and among the farmers that are exploring an alternative farming styles. I believe that having a practical experience in this period of my life will help me direct the future of my career in applied academic research in order to help innovators from rural areas reach their full potential and be able to adapt in terms of environmental, economical and social challenges.

My academic training has helped me to understand better the agricultural challenges from a research perspective and I am ready to put this into practice by both planning and hands-on work on the field. I have previous experience with agricultural work on small scale farms and I have been active in various NGOs focusing on topic from permaculture to assistance to marginalized groups.

What I expect from host organisation

A host with clear idea what needs to be done and a good working plan. I am quite adaptable, eager to do practical on-field work and open to new experiences and challenges. Looking forward to have the chance to do individual and team work.
